Art in New Bedford

by Janice Hodson
Curator of Art, New Bedford Free Public Library

The phenomenal economic successes of the whaling and textile industries in the 19th century would turn New Bedford from a sleepy backwater to a cosmopolitan city in which the arts could not only exist but thrive. Whaling merchants and mill owners became collectors and patrons. Even members of the Quaker elite commissioned portraits of themselves.

Names that became internationally famous in the art world — Albert Pinkham Ryder, Augustus Saint-Gaudens, William Bradford, Robert Swain Gifford, Francis Millet, Dwight Tryon, Clifford Ashley and Dodge Macknight, among many others – either called New Bedford home or found inspiration in the surrounding landscape. Albert Bierstadt, raised in New Bedford and the country's most preeminent painter of the American West, felt confident enough in New Bedford's commitment to the arts to mount the first major exhibition in the city in 1858 featuring work by both local artists and established figures in American and European painting. The New Bedford Free Public Library served as the earliest permanent repository for artwork donated by those who wished to share their collections with the community.

Founded in 1881, Swain School of Design went through several evolutions before becoming a nationally known fine arts school in the 1960s. Under the leadership of New York painter and Hans Hoffman disciple David Loeffler Smith, Swain exerted a major influence on regional artists in the 20th century.

More recent decades have seen a new artistic renaissance in the city. Fed by the arts programs of the University of Massachusetts, Dartmouth; the conversion of long-dormant textile mills into plentiful studio space; and the establishment of organizations like Gallery X, the New Bedford Art Museum/ArtWorks!, the New Bedford Whaling National Historical Park, the monthly cultural collaborative AHA! (Art, Architecture & History), and the state-designated New Bedford Seaport Cultural District, artists and artisans have once again discovered New Bedford. Shops, galleries, museums and restaurants populate the revitalized downtown. Painters, sculptors, ceramicists, woodworkers and metalsmiths open their studios to the public multiple times a year during the New Bedford Open Studios. So visit and experience for yourself the place Atlantic Magazine ranked the seventh most "artistic" city in the country.

Welcome to New Bedford, a historic city that shines with pride for its arts community. Find out why many have found their inspiration here and decided to open art studios. Indulge your eyes and soul in a variety of artwork in all media! Support the artists by buying uniquely-made local artwork - the most memorable souvenir from New Bedford, MA!

“ This city has a special relationship to the arts. Arts are, and always have been, central to the life of our City, as much a part of our DNA as seafaring and manufacturing. It's no wonder that New Bedford was named the 7th most artistic community in the nation by Atlantic Magazine.

New Bedford artists have been a key component to the vibrance and growth of our post-industrial city. By occupying the charming, interesting factory and warehouse spaces, our artists have revitalized these once dormant buildings. There are so many wonderful treasures to uncover in New Bedford.

New mural on Acushnet Ave. by artists Ryan Mcfee and Todd Woodward. Photo credit: New Bedford Guide

“ A short walk through any city that “gets it” in terms of public art and you will notice one overarching theme, it’s everywhere. There is no doubt that art on walls, art performed on the street, sculptural installations, enrich the lives of everyone that interact with them in a way that is unique, refreshing, and inspiring. I for one am not an artist and travel as often as I can too see public art in other cities, because it makes me happy. Knowing I can now do that in my own city, is beyond words. Enjoy with open eyes, minds, and hearts.
